

Fall 2020 Online Semester
September 14th - December 19th

A letter from our Director:

Long Island City School of Ballet is committed to the health and safety of our community. After much consideration, and consultation with colleagues and health experts, we have made the difficult decision to host our Fall 2020 semester entirely online.

The dance industry has not yet received official permission from New York State to resume in person classes. We are planning to return to the studios in January, if permitted.

This has been a long, sometimes sad, and definitely frustrating five months away from our students, families, friends and faculty. But one thing we know for certain -- ballet is not finished. Ballet will continue at LICSB, in New York City, and around the world. Ballet dancers are resilient, determined, and constant artists, whether they are in a studio or not. And they are patient. No one can achieve their goals in ballet without grit and patience. There is not another group of people better suited to the endeavor of persevering!!!

We are happy to be able to offer a fall semester which we believe will continue to hone, push and inspire your dancers. We have structured the semester with a lot of freedom within the schedule. We hope that as your student navigates the new normal of their academic schooling, they are always able to find a ballet class to balance their day, soothe their souls, challenge their bodies and refine their technique.

Sincerely
Eric Ragan
Founder and Director of LICSB
